Western Cabinet of Curiosities, are delicately designed with an elegant exterior and versatile interior, offering a hidden sanctuary within. The Curio Pavilion, an essential possession for scholars and literati during the Ming and Qing dynasties, also represents the Chinese wisdom in spatial understanding and utilization.

Non-renewable resources have become the undisputed top luxury of this era. Thus, air, water, forests, mountains... all nature here, is allowed to grow and achieve immortality, becoming the rare treasures within the "Urban Curio Pavilion." It also allows the homeowners, to become among the few who can control space and time in this era.

ELEVATOR HALL

The design inspiration for the elevator hall comes from the natural intent of the bamboo forest in a curio box, with contrast and surprise being the theme of the space. As the elevator doors open, it's as though one is transported through a time machine into a bamboo grove, where sunlight dapples through the gaps between bamboo leaves.

East and West Halls - The Sky Hall (Yuanxiang Hall)

Named for its expansive and circular essence, the sky hall contrasts with the natural light from the sky and the urban skyline against the dim elevator hall, offering a dreamlike journey through the clouds. The Earth Hall (Kunyu Hall), representing the weight and sculpture of mountains and stones with natural limestone, contrasts with the Sky Hall's lightness and brightness.

Waiting Area - Pansi Pavilion

Named for its view over the city and reminiscent of new homes and hometowns, this space aims to present a subdued elegance, integrating visitors into the cityscape and future residences, complemented by an Art Deco lamp sculpture by Max Le Verrier, evoking the moon's beauty.

Front Courtyard - Yunqi Garden

Designed for tranquility and preparation for a unique journey, featuring handcrafted Nepalese singing bowls and sculptures by Han Dong, inviting guests to clear their minds.

The Sutra Pavilion

The heart of the space, blending ancient knowledge and healing cosmic energy, encapsulated within this unique Urban Curio Cabinet. The architecture, inspired by traditional Chinese structures and adorned with gold leaf over black gauze, harmonizes with hand-painted sky murals, expressing an endless sky.
