

New Guide 200: Index-Design Highlights Québec's Most Influential Architecture and Interior Design Practices

Montréal, June 16, 2026 — For the past 17 years, the Guide 200 Québec Architects and Interior Designers has documented the richness and diversity of the practices shaping Québec's built environment. Published annually by Index-Design, this editorial reference highlights the projects, expertise, and ideas driving the evolution of architecture and interior design across the province.

This new edition is being released during a particularly significant year for Index-Design, as we celebrate our 20th anniversary and the inaugural edition of Montréal Design Week. More than ever, the Guide reflects the vitality of Québec's design community and the essential role that design professionals play in enhancing the quality of our living environments. Through the featured projects, readers will discover thoughtful, committed, and innovative approaches that are helping shape the Québec of today and tomorrow," says Sandra Heintz, Managing Director of Index-Design.

The publication is further enriched by a selection of 25 recent projects curated by the Index-Design editorial team. Through residential, commercial, institutional, cultural, and landscape projects, this selection offers insight into the trends and innovations currently shaping the fields of architecture and interior design.

Where to find the Guide 200

The 17th edition of the Guide 200 Québec Architects and Interior Designers is available for $24.95 at Nuspâce, both online and in-store. It is also distributed through several partner showrooms and available at various specialized bookstores, giving both professionals and the general public access to the very best of Québec architecture and interior design.

Belœil, a Cover Project by Atelier Barda

This year's cover features Belœil, a residential project by Atelier Barda. Located in Outremont, the renovation transforms an existing residence by building on the site's inherent architectural qualities. Marked by a restrained approach, the intervention highlights original details, natural light, and a rich material palette to create an environment that is both timeless and contemporary.

By spotlighting the projects, firms, and ideas that are shaping contemporary practice, Index-Design continues to play a leading role in documenting and promoting excellence in architecture and design across Québec. This editorial mission expanded this year with the inaugural edition of Montréal Design Week, a new platform dedicated to showcasing the creativity, expertise, and cultural impact of Québec design.
