

Ontario Court of Justice

Telling Stories of Place with Integrated Signage

Frontier designed a wayfinding system for the new Ontario Court of Justice in Toronto, partnering with a diverse development team led by Ellis Don and Renzo Piano Building Workshop. The new courthouse will be Renzo Piano's first building in Canada.

Signage regulations within courthouse buildings are strict and detailed. With that in mind, our team was mindful to align our ideation to those regulations every step of the way, seeking out creative solutions within those constraints wherever possible. The result is an intricate hierarchical system that's integrated within the custom wall panels of the interior architecture while still allowing for selective narrative moments like the atrium History Wall, which showcases historic photos of the surrounding neighbourhood.
